Description The house has a double gabled roof of sheet iron which was formerly striped and is of a pitch which suggests shingles originally clad the roof. A face-brick, corniced chimney is at the intersection of the two gabled bays, indicating staged construction, whilst the double supports to the verandah may have been originally panelled or trellised: the verandah roof is concave in profile (Butler 1982:21).

Condition Integrity

History Early land owner: William Hawden.

This house is thought to be the site of George Collis's butchers shop of early this century and is believed to have adjoined a cordial factory on the north (Gleeson's) (1). This has not been ratified.

Final Ranking Final Recommendation Amendment C26

Statement of significance The asymmetrically placed gabled bay may have been added and the fences have been removed, but otherwise the house is relatively original and indicative of buildings of the 1860s. Thus it is an important element of the surviving character of the old township (Butler 1982:21).
